About the Department
 Mugberia Gangadhar Mahavidyalaya was born in the year 1964 as a vow to fulfil the vision of imparting a holistic education to the people of this area and marked a watershed in the history of the founder. The Department of Political Science of Mugberia Gangadhar Mahavidyalaya is one of the earliest bearers of its glorious cultural heritage and has witnessed a steady growth in keeping with the shifting contours of higher education in a rural centre. Right after the inception of the college, wisdom guided our founding fathers to choose Political Science as one of the courses to begin with as a reformation of the rich tradition of India. Thus began the long journey of the department, a journey far from over. In 1964 only the General (Elective) Course in Political Science was offered. Then in 1970 the Honours Course was introduced. Over the decades the department has built a robust student base. At the beginning there were only 36 students. But now there are 80 students in Honours and 400 students in the General Course. Recently the departmental library has been upgraded for the students. The number of books has been increased more than 500. Moreover, the Central Library of the college is equipped with almost 5000 & above books on Political Science, Economic and literature. The Department hosted a State Level Seminar on India and the Global Climate Governance : Emerging Trends.

About the Seminar
 India is a significant player in climate policy and politics. It has been vocal in international climate negotiations, but its role in these negotiations has changed over time. In an interactive relationship between domestic policy and international position, India has increasingly become a testing ground for policies that internalize climate considerations into development. This article critically reviews the arc of climate policy and politics in India over time. It begins by examining changes in knowledge and ideas around climate change in India, particularly in the areas of ethics, climate impacts, India's energy transition, linkages with sustainability, and sequestration. The next section examines changes in politics, policy, and governance at both international and national scales. The article argues that shifts in ideas and knowledge of impacts, costs, and benefits of climate action and shifts in the global context are reflected and refracted through discourses in India's domestic and international policies.
 The issues inhibiting global environmental governance are manifold first being, Climate justice, the question is "who is responsible for the damage and who is responsible for the damage and who ought to contribute towards its mitigation ? ", the developing countries take the view of common but differentiated responsibility (CBDR) and historical responsibility of the developed countries, having ushered into industrial growth first and damaging the environment, squeezing the "carbon budget" . The developed, while accepting the gravity of situation maintain that since it was not known back then they there should be shared responsibility of all towards climate change mitigation and adaptation specially those like China and India, the fast-growing economies and the largest emitters (1st and 3rd respectively)
