The Department of Political Science organized Constitution Day on November 26th at SN Bose Hall, featuring a seminar focused on 'India: The Mother of Democracy.' The event aimed to delve into various aspects of Indian democracy, shedding light on its historical background, philosophical underpinnings, and the constitutional infrastructure safeguarding it.

The distinguished Principal, Dr. Swapan Kumar Misra, commenced the seminar by delivering a lecture on Indian democracy, providing valuable insights into its functioning and significance. Following this, Professor Alok Ranjan Khatua, an assistant professor in the Philosophy Department, shared a philosophical perspective on Indian democracy, adding depth to the discourse. Professor Jyoti Mitra, an assistant professor in the Political Science department, contributed by presenting a comprehensive lecture on the historical background of Indian democracy and the constitutional infrastructure designed to protect it. This segment provided attendees with a thorough understanding of the evolution and protective mechanisms of India's democratic framework.

Addressing the principles embedded in the Indian Constitution, Professor Debashish Ray, an associate professor from the Physical Education Department, delivered a speech that highlighted the foundational values guiding the nation. The significance of these principles in shaping the democratic ethos was elucidated, adding a holistic dimension to the seminar. To symbolize the commitment to the Constitution, Professor Ranita Bain read the Preamble aloud as an oath in front of the students, reinforcing the foundational principles that bind the nation together.

Finally, Professor Jonaki Biswas, Associate Professor, and Head of the Political Science Department, concluded the program with a vote of thanks, expressing gratitude to all participants and emphasizing the importance of constitutional values in shaping the fabric of Indian democracy.

The Constitution Day seminar provided a platform for an interdisciplinary exploration of the various facets of Indian democracy, enriching the academic experience for both faculty members and students. The diverse perspectives offered by experts from different departments contributed to a comprehensive understanding of the constitutional framework and its pivotal role in upholding democratic ideals.
